

The “Not a Checklist” Negotiation Sheet for BDSM Bottoms

by Tornus

I'm a big fan of the fantastic one page negotiation checklist created by @amothtotheflame. It's succinct, well-organized, and does a great job of summarizing what you actually need to know during casual pick-up play.

I've found, though, that this sheet doesn't really meet my needs when I'm negotiating with a new partner, especially someone who's fairly new to kink. What I really want is not so much a list of activities, but rather a peek inside their head: what makes them tick, and what would it take to make them tock?

Here's a first stab at creating the tool that I've been looking for but haven't found. It's primarily meant for bottoms, and is doubtless more than a little idiosyncratic. Hopefully you'll find it to be of some use.

This isn't meant to be a checklist: don't go down the page putting 1s and 4s and NOs next to each line, or circling things in red and green ink. Rather, look at this as a collection of ideas that may be useful to you in understanding yourself, or that you may want your partner to know about you.

Rather than giving your partner a filled-in version of this list, consider giving them a short list of the sentences that most resonated for you. And, obviously, feel free to add / modify sentences as you see fit.
